01:28:18 Tracy Gieger: Is there a way to compost things like paper towels, even if food composting is not practical?

01:29:01 Araceli Lucio-F (she|her): Araceli Lucio-Forster, Micro & Immunol RTE

01:29:32 Ken Birman: There is! In Seattle you get food and so forth in what seems to be plastic, yet they create the containers from a starch-based material and they allow you to compost literally everything -- containers, utensils, napkins, paper towels....

01:29:36 Keith Obadike: Keith Obadike, Art

01:29:59 S.C. Pryor: Sara C Pryor, EAS

01:29:59 Tobi Hines: Tobi Hines, Faculty Senator for the Library

01:33:35 Tracy Gieger: Ken- thanks. I mean on this campus, is there any way to start composting things that already exist all over like paper towels - they are collected in a separate bin from regular trash

01:44:13 Ken Birman: Not right now -- the composting company (Cayuga Compost, located in Trumansburg) doesn't work with materials like paper and natural cork. Somehow Seattle has negotiated a different composting solution. But one could imagine Cornell doing as Seattle manages to do.

02:30:08 Ken Birman: Farewell, fellow senators! I've retired and moved away, and for the "good of the order" decided not to ask for five minutes. But it really has been fun (mostly) and I hope anyone who is here but not a senator will consider service.
